

Russia Prods Leaders Of Poland to Combat 'Anti-Socialist' Forces

By Dusko Doder
Washington Post Service
MOSCOW — The Soviet Union criticized Polish Communist leaders Wednesday for not doing enough to curb "anti-Socialist" activities in the country...

The criticism, carried by Tass and Pravda, charged that counter-revolutionary forces "have become important without encountering rebuff from the authorities."

Neither Stanislaw Kamia, the Polish party leader, nor Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski were mentioned by name. However, Tass quoted with approval a member of the Polish Politburo, Stefan Olaszowski, who said the authorities would use "any means which may be demanded" to defend Socialism in Poland.

This position, Mr. Olaszowski was quoted as saying, is supported by a vast majority of the population. "The most important thing at the moment, he added, is to ban all 'adventurist' activities."

Tass pointedly omitted any references to Mr. Olaszowski's statement Tuesday that the Soviet Union might cut off vital economic assistance to Poland unless there was an end to anti-Soviet agitation in the country.

In a steady escalation of pressure on Poland, all major Soviet newspapers as well as radio and television are devoting large amounts of space to the crisis. The independent trade union Solidarity is being portrayed as a political movement led by reactionaries and "fascist-type extremists" who are planning to seize power.

The publication of anti-Soviet material still continues in Poland, Tass said. It added that despite an official ban, Solidarity's bulletin at Huta Katowice continues to come out and is distributing "slandering material that puts the Soviet Union and Nazi Germany on the same level."

Pravda reprinted an East German commentary on the Polish crisis that alleges that Solidarity has organized "fighting formations on the pattern of [Nazi] storm troopers."

Moscow television said that Solidarity is planning to eliminate the Socialist system, that it is demanding the removal of Communists from important positions and that some people go as far as to talk about the need "to destroy Communists."

The increasingly pronounced line is that Solidarity's leaders, in collusion with "imperialist forces backing them," are creating a threat to Poland that is, as the government newspaper Inwenzia put it, "tantamount to a threat" to the entire Soviet bloc.

Union compromise welcomed
WARSAW (AP) — The Polish government Wednesday welcomed a compromise move by Solidarity leaders over worker self-management as a "step toward realism," and official sources said it could help to heal a government-union rift.

Nevertheless, local union chapters continued to barrage the government and Communist Party with criticism for their broadsides against Solidarity last week.

Union leaders drew back Tuesday from insisting that workers have absolute autonomy to hire and dismiss factory managers and business leaders, offering to compromise with the government, which says it must maintain responsibility for appointments to industry positions.

Government sources said the apparent compromise move by Solidarity leaders indicated the start of some "bridge building" between the two sides. At the first part of its congress two weeks ago, Solidarity criticized a government version of the law that would only have given workers veto power over government appointments.

Even with the cuts in military budgets announced on Sept. 12, demands for more reductions have continued. Some prominent Republicans, several liberal Democrats and leaders of organized labor, as well as persons opponents of military spending, have called for further cuts.

"Fragile Consensus"
Pentagon officials said that $27.4 billion in appropriations, rather than the $21 billion announced by the White House, would have to be taken from the military budget to achieve the savings of $13 billion in arms spending. Appropriations give the services the authority to spend money but actual spending usually lags.

Mr. Weinberger has argued against further cuts in military spending because they might damage what his predecessor, Harold Brown, called the "fragile consensus" among Americans supporting an increase in U.S. military power.

Mr. Weinberger, who plans to meet in Europe with other defense ministers next month, said he would continue to urge Europeans to increase their efforts on military spending. "We will point out that we are making very deep cuts in domestic spending," he said, "but we will avoid the kind of high interest rates they're first to complain about."

WARSAW — Police units wounded one of four hijackers after a LOT Polish Airlines plane they had attempted to seize returned to Warsaw's international airport, the official Polish news agency PAF reported.

The pilot of the Soviet-built Antonov-24 had managed to divert the attention of the hijackers Tuesday night during a routine Warsaw-Koszalin flight and return to Warsaw, where a standoff developed, the agency reported.

After exhausting nonviolent methods of getting the hijackers to disembark, PAF said, special police units used weapons to end the standoff. One of the four, identified only as Gerard F. of Gdansk, was seriously wounded, PAF said.

The agency said the other three were Andrzej F., Kazimierz K., and Ewa Mroczek, all of Gdansk. It was the sixth attempt to hijack a Polish domestic flight since July 21. It occurred four days after a dozen students hijacked a Katowice-Warsaw flight to West Berlin.

Limit Set On Cut in U.S. Arms

Weinberger Says It's $13 Billion

By Richard Halloran
New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger says that President Reagan has assured him that planned military budgets will not be reduced beyond the $13 billion over the next three years that has been announced by the White House.

Mr. Weinberger said during an interview in his Pentagon office: "That's the defense cut." Asked whether he had been given assurances that there would be no further cuts, Mr. Weinberger replied: "From the president, yes."

The secretary said, "The only change in the defense budget is in '82, '83, and '84." He said that beyond the 1984 goal the administration has set for balancing the budget, the president had left military budget projections for 1985 and 1986 as they were planned last March.

They were "specifically examined, considered, and left intact," Mr. Weinberger said. "It was part of the overall settlement, we might call it, of the entire matter."

"Roughly 7 Percent"
Trimming $13 billion out of the $65.7 billion the Reagan administration had planned to spend on military forces during the three fiscal years beginning Oct. 1 would still leave the military budget above the $61.5 billion planned by the Carter administration.

Mr. Weinberger asserted that "we are going to be able to hit roughly 7 percent if we stay within the cuts the president is talking about," referring to the annual real growth rate Mr. Reagan had pledged.

But deeper cuts, the defense secretary said, would bring the military budget back to or below the level set by President Jimmy Carter.

Even with the cuts in military budgets announced on Sept. 12, demands for more reductions have continued. Some prominent Republicans, several liberal Democrats and leaders of organized labor, as well as persons opponents of military spending, have called for further cuts.

Strains on East, West Arms Goals

Institute Says Tight Budgets, Sales Abroad Take Toll

By Leonard Downie Jr.
Washington Post Service
LONDON — Economic constraints and growing competition in military sales to the Third World are complicating efforts by both the NATO alliance and the Warsaw Pact to modernize and expand their forces, according to the International Institute for Strategic Studies, an authority on world armaments.

The United States and the Soviet Union are diverting military resources from Europe to the Third World, where the arms race has accelerated as attempts to restrain arms transfers "have largely evaporated," according to the London-based institute.

In its annual review of the world's military forces, "The Military Balance," published Wednesday, the IISS concluded that "despite the continuing modernization and proliferation of military establishments around the world, the strain of limited financial and manpower resources for defense is becoming increasingly noticeable, especially in Western Europe."

In NATO countries, beset with government budget problems, high inflation, and rising wage, fuel and technological costs — military forces "will tend to shrink" even if military spending is held steady or somewhat increased, the institute said.

Lagging Budgets
"The striking fact is that increases in defense budgets no longer produce increases in defense forces," said Christopher Bertram, the institute director. Just keeping up with the cost of new high-tech weapons requires an annual increase in military spending of about 6 percent above inflation, IISS experts estimate. Most NATO allies are unable to meet the target of an annual 3-percent increase above inflation.

"The economic problems of maintaining defenses are becoming more difficult," Mr. Bertram said. "This is also happening in Eastern Europe. The trend is clearly visible there, although we can't provide figures. Economic problems could be the most important impetus for arms control in the 1980s."

At the same time, increasing competition in military equipment sales to Third World countries, for both economic and political reasons, "are causing governments to divert arms from the re-equipment of their own forces, resulting in slippages in domestic procurement programs," the IISS said.

The Soviet Union appears to have fallen behind in supplying new tanks to the Warsaw Pact armies, according to the IISS, because of "substantial Soviet arms sales to Third World countries such as Iraq, India, Libya and Syria." Since the IISS report was completed, the United States has run short of new F-16 jet fighter planes because of sales agreements with Third World countries, most recently Pakistan.

There are no signs that Soviet, American or European arms exports to the Third World are slowing down, and Third World countries such as Brazil, Israel and Argentina also are seeking to export significant quantities of weapons, the report said. "Earlier policies of jettisoning from selling arms into areas of tension are eroding as a result of competitive fears and economic incentives."

While the United States is protracted in the Middle East, King Hussein of Jordan has dismissed the Reagan administration's efforts to build a Middle East policy around an anti-Soviet "strategic alliance" with Israel and friendly Arab nations as a simplistic idea that ignores the true causes of instability in the region.

Until the Reagan administration faces those causes — Palestinian rights and Israeli occupation of Arab lands — with honesty, evenhandedness and justice, the king said Tuesday, instability will continue to threaten U.S. interests in the area, strategic alliance or not.

"Obviously, unless this is achieved adequately, with justice, peace eludes us in this area and the danger grows," the Hashemite monarch, who is traditionally pro-Western, said in an interview.

King Hussein also had praise for the eight-point peace proposal advanced last month by Crown Prince Fahd of Saudi Arabia.

Indications of a Tilt
The king, who has dealt with every U.S. president since Dwight D. Eisenhower, insisted that he did not want to pass judgment prematurely on U.S. policy. He will go to the United States on Nov. 2 to meet President Reagan.

The 43-year-old monarch said that although there were "already indications" of a U.S. tilt toward Israel under Mr. Reagan, he hoped that this was not the case.

He said he was hopeful that Mr. Reagan would wait, as he has promised, until personally sounding out key Middle East leaders before defining U.S. policy toward the Middle East. President Anwar Sadat of Egypt visited Washington in July, and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin traveled to Washington earlier this month.

Sadat Says U.S. Arms Afghans

Reports Weapons Bought in Egypt

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The United States has bought weapons from Egypt and has been shipping them to anti-Soviet rebels in Afghanistan for almost two years, President Anwar Sadat has revealed in an interview.

Mr. Sadat's comments, made to Peter Miller, an NBC-TV correspondent in Cairo on Tuesday night, provide the first confirmation of frequent Soviet charges that Washington is providing arms to Afghan rebels fighting an estimated 85,000 Soviet troops along with Afghan government troops.

In the interview, Mr. Sadat said: "Let me recall this secret. The first moment the Afghani incident took place, the U.S. contacted me here, and the transport of armaments to the Afghans started from Cairo on U.S. planes."

The Soviet Union intervened in Afghanistan in December, 1979. The Egyptian president added that the shipments will continue "until [the] Afghans get rid of the Soviets."

A State Department spokesman declined to comment on the report, but he said, "As we have previously noted, the bulk of the arms in Afghan national hands have been obtained from indigenous sources. These include arms captured from the Soviets, from defectors or cooperating Afghan Army personnel and existing supplies in local hands."

Mr. Miller quoted a high Egyptian government official as saying that the arms are being flown directly to Pakistan. The arms now being shipped are Egyptian-made replicas of the Soviet originals, the report said. But it did not specify what kind of weapons were involved.

The original arms were supplied to Egypt by the Soviet Union at a time when Egypt was thought to be firmly in the Soviet camp. But Egypt expelled 17,000 Soviet advisers from the country in 1972, accusing Moscow of interference in Egyptian affairs.

Mr. Sadat, in apparent reference to U.S. aid to Egypt amounting to $1.5 billion annually, said in the interview that Washington had been "very generous" in paying for the weapons taken from Egyptian military stocks.

King Hussein has much riding on his visit to Washington. Far-Ranging Disaffection
The disaffection extends from the elites to the marketplace and the streets, where there is a growing move to boycott U.S. goods in protest against what is popularly perceived as Washington's unconditional support for Israel and dismissal of Arab viewpoints.

DEATH IN BERLIN — Pedestrians stopped to look Wednesday morning at a woman who formed a cross from sticks to mark the site where a young man was killed Tuesday during clashes with police over evictions of squatters in West Berlin. France Rejects Nationalizing Foreign Banks

By Frank J. Prill
New York Times Service
PARIS — The Socialist French government, as expected, Wednesday approved a law to nationalize five major industrial corporations and 36 French banks, ignoring its own advisory body, the Council of State, the government declined to include foreign banks in its takeover plan.

The nationalization plan would include not only current stock prices but also net profits and the capitalization of profit of the affected companies as factors in compensation. The additions were recommended by the Council of State. Financial analysts here estimated that the changes would double the government's compensation obligation from around $4.6 billion to close to $9.2 billion.

Company Takeovers
The sweeping nationalization legislation, approved at a Cabinet meeting chaired by President Francois Mitterrand, now goes to the National Assembly for debate. The Socialist majority in the French parliament virtually assures the law's passage.

The companies to be taken over by the government if the legislation is passed are the Compagnie Generale d'Electricite, Compagnie de Saint-Gobain, Pechiney Ugine Kuhlmann, Rhone-Poulenc and Thomson-Brandt. The takeover agreement was more generous than the one originally announced by Finance Minister Jacques Delors. Under the original plan, the government would have compensated private stockholders according to a formula based solely on current stock values.

Would Be Unfair
The Council of State, which advises the government on the constitutionality of proposed laws, said last week that excluding the foreign banks would be unfair to the French banks and could lead to protracted legal problems. Originally, the government said it would nationalize all banks with assets of more than 1 billion francs (about $185 million), excluding foreign banks.

Apparently the government proposal simply included all the French banks on its list and ignored the foreign banks regardless of their assets.

The nationalization announcement made no mention of what may happen to the foreign partners and customers of the 36 banks included in the takeover plan. The compensation bonds would carry high interest.

Hussein Calls U.S. Mideast Policy Simplistic

Erratic Rains Threaten India With Severe Food Problem

Israeli Plan for Palestinians Issued as Cairo Talks Open

CAIRO — Israel outlined a plan to replace soldiers with civilians in its administration of occupied Arab lands at the resumption of talks here Wednesday with Egypt on Palestinian autonomy.

Israeli officials said the plan was intended to gain the confidence of Palestinians living in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. It was presented by Defense Minister Ariel Sharon.

Egypt began the talks, which reopened after a 16-month break, by spelling out a list of old demands. Egyptian officials said Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Ali called on Israel to stop building Jewish settlements on occupied Arab land, to release Palestinian prisoners and to restore Arab sovereignty over East Jerusalem.

The Sharon plan was described by Israeli officials as a step toward Palestinian autonomy. There was no immediate reaction from the Egyptian side, but Cairo has been urging Israel to try to encourage Palestinians to take part in peace efforts.

commission by the storms. It was so bad that four of six telex machines reserved for Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's use stopped working.

But, more important, the onset of the rains gave India the hope of a bountiful harvest and economic prosperity for the coming year.

Now, two and a half months later, that hope has not been fulfilled. Although the monsoon started on time and with a rush, agricultural experts report that it died out early, and the rains of late August and early September that are vital for a successful harvest in October never came.

The monsoon rains, which generally end in northern India in mid-September, quit a month early this year. Agriculture Minister Rao Birendra Singh acknowledged the government's concern to Parliament last week and said that extra water was being released for irrigation and that power supplies were being increased for farmers so they can use pumps to water their fields.

Western agricultural experts here whose forecasts have been accurate in the past are predicting that India, which ended four years of self-sufficiency in grains when it purchased 1.5 million tons of wheat from the United States in July, is likely to be forced back into the international market as a result of a poor harvest caused by the early end of the monsoon.

One expert predicted that India will have to purchase another 2.5 million to 3 million tons of wheat. It will be, however, a hard political decision for India to make, as this country takes great pride in its newly won ability to feed its 684 million people with home-grown grains. The original purchase drew a storm of protest from newspapers and politicians, including some members of Mrs. Gandhi's ruling Congress-I Party.

Monsoon Needed

The reality, though, is that India, like most of the countries of Asia and Africa, is subject to the vagaries of nature. Even with a vast increase in irrigation across the country and the use of fertilizer and miracle seeds, a good monsoon is needed for a bumper crop.

Furthermore, despite its boast of being the 10th largest industrial power in the world, its nuclear reactors and its fledgling space program, India remains essentially an agricultural society. Almost 80 percent of its people live in more than half a million villages, 200,000 of which have neither a water supply nor electricity.

To them, the seemingly capricious coming and going of the rains is all important for survival.

For India, this year's monsoon has been one of the most capricious of all. A large portion of the northern Indian state of Rajasthan, for example, suffered through its third year of drought in which farmers could not even get enough fodder to feed their cattle. Yet the capital city of Jaipur was hit by the worst flooding in its history when torrential rains fell in that area of the state.

Famine Possible

The fall harvest crops in most of the state are reported to be withering since there has been no real rain since the July deluge. The newspaper Indian Express reported that 20 of the state's 26 districts faced famine because the crops were either flooded away or dried out because of lack of rain.

The same is true in Uttar Pradesh, India's most populous state, where worsening floods were reported in its eastern districts and drought in the west.

Experts in that state predicted a 30-percent crop loss from the expected yield of 9 million tons. In the district of Bulandshahr alone, according to The Times of India, sugar cane, corn and millet crops are virtually destroyed and wheat fields lay parched. The total loss was estimated at $50 million.

viding Pakistan with planes and weapons, for example, neighboring India is both buying and intending to produce itself "a wide range of modern weapons" from tanks to fighter aircraft "which will underline further the Indian lead over other regional forces, including those of Pakistan," the IISS said.

Creation of the U.S. rapid deployment force in the Gulf area is diverting U.S. forces from NATO responsibilities in Europe, it said. On the other side, the report said, "Events in Poland have underlined the long-standing uncertainty on whether Soviet planners can count on the loyalty of all Warsaw Pact members in the event of a European war."

The IISS, an independent, foun-

The rice crop in the state was reported to have been almost totally destroyed. The chief minister of that state, Vishwanath Pratap Singh, is using police radios to get reports of shortages of power and diesel fuel for irrigation pumps.

The rice crop in the Punjab is expected to be 25 percent less than predicted. Moreover, a shortage of fodder caused by the drought has reduced the milk yield of buffalo by as much as 40 percent.

According to reports reaching here, other northern Indian states hit by the early end of the monsoon are Bihar and Haryana, where agricultural experts predict a 30-percent loss in rice crops and a 50-percent cut in corn and millet.

The poor harvest comes at a time when India's reserve stocks are drawn down because of the 1979 drought, considered one of this country's worst. It was India's ability to feed itself from its reserve during that drought that led many experts to say it had reached self-sufficiency.

Now, however, reserve stocks are down to 13.5 million tons — including 7 million tons of wheat and 6 million tons of rice — compared to a total of 20 million tons of food grains in reserve last year.

Anarchists Smash Antiques at Posh Paris Restaurant

PARIS — A gang of anarchists broke an estimated $75,000 worth of antiques and set off stink bombs in a raid on one of the world's most famous restaurants.

Most of the customers appeared to take the attack Tuesday night in stride, some even finishing the desserts they had ordered before the incident occurred. Firemen appeared within minutes and assured everyone that there was no fire.

Police said about 20 youths rushed into the ground floor of La Tour d'Argent, smashed vases, turned over 18th-century tables and chairs, broke

"I've spent my life trying to collect nice things," said Claude Terrail, the Tour d'Argent owner, as he surveyed the damage in his first-floor bar and reception area. "Now there doesn't seem to be any point in trying again."

The patrons in the upper floors noticed the smoke and smell when it filtered into the main dining area. Waiters opened windows, and more than a dozen diners perched on the iron grillwork overlooking the Seine to breathe fresh air.

have told the Senate Budget Committee in closed session Tuesday that the Army would terminate the Roland air defense missile program, slow down the purchase of M-1 Abrams tanks and infantry fighting vehicles, and cut back on some construction. The Navy would retire 18 ships early and reduce fleet steaming time. The Air Force was to stop buying KC-10 aerial tankers, slow down the purchase of A-10 attack planes, and revamp the A-10 and F-16 fighter planes to buy lower cost night attack devices.

In an internal memorandum, Frank C. Carlucci, the deputy secretary of defense, instructed the Army, Navy and Air Force not to cut funds for manpower, ammunition, supplies and other items that would bring units to full strength.

Mr. Carlucci said the services were to continue to acquire stocks so that by 1987 the United States could sustain forces in battle for 60 days in Europe, South Korea, or around the Gulf. He also said they were to acquire 120 days' worth of spare parts for long-range air transports.

Reserves for Gulf

The war reserves for the Gulf, Mr. Carlucci said, were to be enough to sustain a force of three Army divisions, two Marine Corps divisions and their accompanying air wings, aircraft carriers and their escorting vessels, and seven Air Force wings.

The Army and Air Force were instructed to protect spending that would build up forces for Southwest Asia and the Rapid Deployment Force but would be permitted to stretch out military construction at the Egyptian base at Ras Banas. The Navy was told to continue to provide funds for building or acquiring hospital ships and medical support for the Rapid Deployment Force.

The memorandum also said that funds were to be spent to keep the commitment to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to field 10 divisions in Europe, if necessary, so that the administration could continue to press the Europeans to build up their own defenses.

Mr. Carlucci's memorandum provided guidance for the services on the overall cuts they were to take during the next three years. The Air Force was to take the largest reduction in appropriations, $13.7 billion, or a 6 percent slice; the Army $6.4 billion, a 3.6 percent cut; and the Navy $7.3 billion, a 3 percent slice.

Bangladesh Executes 12 Implicated in Coup Try

DACCA, Bangladesh — The government executed 12 army officers early Wednesday for their part in the assassination May 30 of President Ziaur Rahman in a coup attempt. The announcement of the executions set off rioting in the streets of Dhacca and witnesses said police fired tear-gas shells and made several arrests.

The Bangladesh Supreme Court on Tuesday rejected appeals by the condemned men, saying it had no jurisdiction to interfere with the verdict of the court-martial that heard the case in closed session in July. The court-martial acquitted seven other officers and gave 12 others jail terms of from five to 20 years.

Acting president Abdus Sattar had refused opposition party requests to stay the executions. Elections to choose a successor to the late president, who was killed during a brief rebellion in the port city of Chittagong, have been set for Nov. 15.

NEW DELHI — Afghan and Soviet forces lost 150 dead or wounded in recent fighting for control of the rebel-held Panjshir Valley, north of Kabul, diplomatic sources said Wednesday.

Government troops have been battling the rebels for control of the valley, 160 kilometers (100 miles) from the capital. During the past 18 months, the Soviet-supported government troops have been unsuccessful in three attempts to capture it.

In the latest encounter, the sources said, rebel and civilian casualties were estimated at between 50 and 75 dead and up to 500 wounded. There have been conflicting reports about the outcome of fighting in the valley, and the diplomats in India did not say how they reached their estimates.

U.S. to Make SALT Approach Within 6 Months

United Press International

WASHINGTON — A Pentagon official said Wednesday that the Reagan administration would approach the Soviet Union within the next six months about starting strategic arms limitation talks.

Richard N. Perle, assistant secretary of defense for international security policy, unveiled the timetable as the Soviet Union and the United States were about to begin discussions on arranging a time and place for negotiations on medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe.

Mr. Perle said it would not be necessary for the United States to use the talks on medium-range nuclear forces as an "artificial" gateway for beginning new talks on strategic weapons. Former Defense Secretary Harold Brown has suggested such an approach. "We will approach the Soviets within the next six months on SALT," Mr. Perle said.

Khomeini Calls for Purge of Leftists in Schools

LONDON — Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini called for a purge of leftist pupils and teachers Wednesday as 10 million Iranian students began the new academic year, Tehran Radio reported. It said millions of students briefly attended classes and then took part in marches in support of the government.

In a message to students, Iran's revolutionary leader said, "It is incumbent on both teachers and students to do their best to identify corrupt elements and to cleanse schools of the dirt of these people." Thousands of university professors and schoolteachers were purged last year after the ayatollah called for the "Islamization" of the education system.

Education Minister Ali Akbar Parvareh, speaking to a student rally at Tehran University, demanded the creation of intelligence departments in schools and the expulsion of non-fundamentalist students. Sources quoted Education Ministry officials as saying some teachers had refused to enroll as many as 40 percent of their former students because of possible leftist leanings.

EEC Unemployment at Record Level

The Associated Press

BRUSSELS — Unemployment in the 10-nation European Economic Community hit a record 9.1 million in August, according to statistics released Wednesday.

Eight percent of the work force was jobless, compared with 7.8 percent in July and 6.1 percent in August, 1980. July's rate had been the worst since the EEC was formed in 1958.

Ivor Richard, EEC social affairs commissioner, predicted before the summer that unless economic conditions improved, the unemployment toll would hit 9 percent before mid-1982.

Belgium, Britain and Ireland had the worst rates, all higher than 10 percent. Employment in Greece and Italy improved slightly, but not enough to alter the percentage rate more than a few hundredths of a percent.

Here are the rates, compared with July: West Germany 4.9 percent, up 0.1; France 7.7 percent, up 0.3; Italy unchanged at 8.6 percent; the Netherlands 7.8 percent, up 0.2; Belgium 12.6 percent, up 0.4; Luxembourg 0.9 percent, up 0.1; Britain 11.3 percent, up 0.4; Ireland 10.4 percent, up 0.1; Denmark 7.3 percent, up 0.3; Greece unchanged at 0.7 percent.

Murder Charged In New Caledonia

United Press International

NOUMEA, New Caledonia — A 20-year-old French citizen was formally charged Wednesday with the assassination of Pierre Declercq, a leader of the Union Calédonienne movement seeking independence for New Caledonia.

Mr. Declercq, 43, one of the few French supporters of independence for the French South Pacific territory, was killed by a shot fired into his house through an open window.

Dominique Canon, known for publicly threatening to use violence against advocates of independence, was charged after the discovery in his garage of a shotgun of the same gauge as that used in the slaying, police said. A list of independence leaders who were to receive threatening letters was found in his house, they said.

Reagan Is Expected to Cancel Plan To Delay Social Security Increases

By Steven K. Weisman
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is expected to have dropped his plans to seek a deferral of cost-of-living increases in various benefit programs, including Social Security, in response to warnings from Republican allies that the proposal would be defeated in Congress.

White House officials said Tuesday, however, that Mr. Reagan's decision on the deferral was tentative and could be reversed. They said many other elements in the president's $16-billion package of budget cuts — the details of which were firm only last Thursday — were also being rewritten.

On Wednesday, administration sources said that Mr. Reagan was likely to retreat from proposed Social Security reductions and seek deeper cuts in other areas, United Press International reported.

The president scheduled a half-hour speech Thursday night to present what Larry Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary, said would be "the next logical step" in his program to revitalize the U.S. economy.

Atmosphere of Disarray

With the deadline set, White House officials were working frantically on proposals for budget cuts in an atmosphere of disarray brought on by warnings from Republicans on Capitol Hill of likely defeat. White House officials said that at least some parts of the package would be presented in defiance of the warnings.

"We're going to have to buck Congress on some things," said a weary administration official. "The hard decision will be to come up with a package that puts us on the road to balancing the budget by 1984 but that also has a reasonable prospect of passage."

Mr. Reagan's immediate aim is to produce a package of cuts to prevent the budget deficit for the next fiscal year — which begins Oct. 1 — from going beyond $42.5 billion. To this end, Mr. Reagan settled last week on $16.3 billion in cuts, including a deferral of cost-of-living increases in at least eight benefit programs, from food stamps to Social Security to pensions for veterans.

The president accepted this package at least in part because Republicans in Congress led him to believe it would pass. On Monday, however, Republican congressional leaders warned him that "people up here just don't think it's going to fly." The official word from White House spokesmen all day Tuesday was that Mr. Reagan would stick with the package of cost-of-living deferrals anyway. At his daily briefing, Mr. Speakes said, "I've heard nothing to indicate a change in that."

On Tuesday evening, various

White House officials said the deferral proposal was out of the package for the time being. The president, they said, had come to recognize the political difficulty of cuts in Social Security at a time when the Democrats seem primed to make them a big election issue in 1982.

"Things are changing around here so fast, you can't tell the players without a scorecard," said a White House official, referring to the number of meetings during the day on this and other pieces of Mr. Reagan's budget package.

Traces of Annoyance

The confusion at the White House was accompanied by more than a trace of annoyance at the behavior of Republican congressional leaders. Aides to Mr. Reagan noted that the president moved last week to produce his package only after demands for action from the congressmen, and that now these same Republicans were "walking away from us" in the words of one.

Two other key changes are likely in the package, meanwhile, the officials said.

First, although Mr. Reagan plans to seek a 12-percent cut in the $4.6-billion revenue-sharing program, which assists cities and other localities, the president reportedly will no longer call for complete elimination of the program by 1984.

The original proposal for eliminating revenue-sharing altogether was shelved, officials said, because of an angry lobbying campaign by mayors, county executives and others, including many supporters of Mr. Reagan's economic program in the past.

The second revision in the package was that Mr. Reagan would be cutting at least some regular appropriations much more than the original goal of 12 percent. Thus the president's approach for an across-the-board cut in all appropriations appeared Tuesday to have fallen victim to his need to find deeper cutbacks after scrapping the cost-of-living deferral.

Exacerbating Factors

In keeping with the need to cut appropriations, the Reagan administration informed Congress on Tuesday in a separate action that food stamp benefits would have to be cut an additional 12 percent to 15 percent next year, on top of the $1.65 billion in cuts enacted by Congress earlier this year.

White House officials now acknowledge that the president's budget problems are exacerbated by two factors: his refusal to increase taxes or defer the recently passed tax cut, and his refusal to trim military spending by more than the recently announced $2 billion next year.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said in testimony Tuesday before the House Budget Committee that the president would absolutely reject all proposals advanced in Congress to defer at least some of the tax cut the president signed into law last month.

The tax cut, worth $750 billion spread over five years, is thought to be a chief reason why the financial community, among others, remains skeptical that the budget can be balanced by 1984, as Mr. Reagan intends.

On top of the $16.3 billion in budget cuts the president plans to unveil Thursday, budget officials say $75 billion must be cut in 1983 and 1984 to balance the budget. The need to keep the deficit from growing larger in 1982 is to be the subject of Mr. Reagan's speech Thursday.

N.Y. Mayor Wins Big in Primary Vote

By John J. Goldman
Los Angeles Times Service

NEW YORK — Mayor Edward I. Koch has won landslide victories in both the Republican and Democratic primary elections, becoming the first mayor in New York City's history to run for office with both major parties' support.

With more than 98 percent of the votes counted Tuesday, Mr. Koch had 60 percent of the vote in the Democratic primary against two opponents and 66 percent in the Republican contest — prompting him with a big smile to tell his cheering supporters: "Everybody say after me, 'God is good.'"

"This is obviously a very satisfying night," the mayor said.

12-Day Delay

The New York City primary was held after a court-enforced 12-day delay because of a dispute over City Council lines that were redrawn after the 1980 census — a wait that Mr. Koch had described as "draining."

Mr. Koch, a registered Democrat, was opposed in the Democratic primary by Assemblyman Frank Barbaro and by Melvin Klenetsky, a Manhattan schoolteacher who previously had sought office as a candidate of the U.S. Labor Party.

Mr. Barbaro will remain on the ballot in November as the candidate of the Unity Party.

In the Republican primary, the mayor faced Assemblyman John A. Esposito, who gathered little financial support for his campaign but was seeking the allegiance of an electorate containing large numbers of voters who, like the candidate, are Italian-American and conservative.

Mayor Ran Hard

Despite what many veteran politicians of both parties said was token opposition, the mayor ran hard, outspending his opponents by better than 10 to 1 and dominating television with his political messages.

The basic themes of his campaign were that he had restored New York City's fiscal stability and spirit, that under his administration reading scores in public schools had improved markedly, and that important change was beginning to take place in blighted neighborhoods.

Betty Dolan, executive director of the Board of Elections, said the voter turnout was light to moderate.

A three-judge federal appeals court had halted the primary Sept. 8 in a dispute over whether recently reapportioned City Council districts discriminate against minorities. After the U.S. Supreme Court turned down an appeal from the Koch administration for an election Sept. 10, the primary proceeded. But all City Council races were struck from the ballot, and that voting will not be held until the Justice Department rules on arguments that the new districts are discriminatory.

Former Aide to Nixon Acquitted of Perjury

By Joan Sweeney
Los Angeles Times Service

PHOENIX — Former U.S. Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst has been acquitted of perjury charges.

Mr. Kleindienst, 58, his wife, Margaret, and two of their children hugged one another and wept after the verdict was announced late Tuesday in state criminal court here. Mr. Kleindienst shook hands with each of the seven women and five men as they filed from the jury box, and offered them his thanks.

If Mr. Kleindienst, who headed the Justice Department in 1972 and 1973 during the Nixon administration, had been convicted on all 12 felony counts against him, the criminal penalties could have totaled up to 100 years in jail, and he would have faced disbarment.

The jury received the case Tuesday morning after five weeks, and took eight hours to find Mr. Kleindienst, a Tucson attorney, not guilty of charges that he had lied in sworn statements during an Arizona Bar Association investigation of Joseph Hauser of Beverly Hills, Calif., an insurance promoter, in 1976.

2 Counts Dismissed

The remaining two counts in the 14-count indictment against Mr. Kleindienst were dismissed Sept. 9 by Judge Gerald Strick, who ruled that the prosecution had failed to present sufficient evidence.

The charges were an outgrowth of Mr. Hauser's involvement in an alleged multimillion-dollar scheme to defraud Teamsters union trust funds. Mr. Hauser, who has been convicted of conspiracy to bribe in another case, later turned government informant and was a key prosecution witness against his former attorney.

In sworn statements in 1978 and 1980 during the bar investigation, Mr. Kleindienst had denied knowledge of improprieties in Mr. Hauser's dealings. During the trial, Mr. Hauser testified that Mr. Kleindienst had been aware of them and had helped deceive Arizona insurance regulators.

Mr. Kleindienst maintained in his testimony that he was an innocent victim of an unscrupulous client and that none of his statements was made with the intent to deceive.

After the jury returned its verdict, Mr. Kleindienst told reporters, "I'm deeply appreciative for this jury and a system that permits me to get a fair hearing."

Mr. Kleindienst still faces possible disciplinary action as a result of the bar investigation. The bar recommended to the Arizona Supreme Court that he be suspended from the practice of law for one year for unethical conduct. That court has not yet ruled.

Most jurors interviewed agreed with their foreman, Dick Meaker, who said that the state had failed to prove Mr. Kleindienst guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

Although the perjury charges against Mr. Kleindienst arose from a case in 1976, three years after he resigned as attorney general during the Watergate scandal, that affair cast a shadow on this case.

The prosecution brought up Mr. Kleindienst's 1974 guilty plea to a misdemeanor charge of failing to testify fully and accurately during his 1972 Senate confirmation hearing. He was fined $100 and given a 30-day suspended sentence on that charge.

Prospective jurors at the trial here were asked to fill out questionnaires that included queries on whether they had read the Watergate book "All the President's Men" or seen the movie made from it.

Guilt-Stricken Citizens Are Repaying U.S.

By David Shribman
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — One letter is signed "A Friend." Another is signed "A Conscientious Taxpayer." A third, addressed to "Uncle Sam," is signed "One of Your Conscience-Stricken Nephews."

Signed and unsigned, in elegant script and tormented scrawl, on fancy stationery, scraps of paper and occasionally even a Christmas card, the notes pour into the U.S. Treasury by the hundreds, each bearing an apology, a check and a promise never to wrong the government again.

In a third-floor office of a Treasury annex, Jean C. Whisonant, an accounting technician, watches over the government's Conscience Fund.

The fund began with a $5 contribution in 1811 and now stands as a $4.4 million monument to America's guilty conscience. So far this year, however, the collective American conscience has prompted contributions of only $4,465.48 — less than 4 percent of the nearly $126,000 contributed in 1980.

Economy Blamed

Has the American sense of guilt evaporated? Mrs. Whisonant blames the economy; among those who have not contributed thus far is a woman who regularly returns a portion of her Social Security check.

The Conscience Fund is the nation's confessional. An Athens, Ga., man wrote that he put in for too much overtime while working on a government project nearly four decades ago, enclosed $40 in cash and said, "Lately this has been on my mind a great deal." A Pittsburgh woman sent $2 to pay for a small butcher knife her son stole from the Navy.

The money is deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts and is used to meet government expenses.

Most of the contributors are income-tax evaders. One man sent $1,355 to cover taxes on $9,921.33 in unreported income and signed his letter with his true name. The IRS has not pursued the case.

Busy at Tax Time

Most contributions, in fact, arrive shortly after the April 15 income tax filing deadline when, according to Mrs. Whisonant, "people are more conscious of the fact they've done something shady."

Not all the contributors are made in single payments. A waiter at the St. Charles Hotel in New Orleans, for example, sent $101.01 to pay for taxes on unreported tips. A month later, he sent $26. A few days later, another $22 arrived in the Treasury Department.

Even more mysterious is the note with a $53 contribution from Stockton, Calif. "This is conscience money," wrote the anonymous guilty soul. "I'm sorry. Forgive me. It happened a long time ago. I want to sleep."

A few years ago a taxpayer from Essex, Mass., put $50 inside a commercial greeting card and added the remark: "We hope you are more honest about this money than we were." The original greeting on the card was crossed out, but its message can still be read. It says, simply: "A cheerful reminder to let you know I think of you often."

GM Selling Houses of Employees And Offers Cars to Sweeten Deals

By Joan Sweeney
New York Times Service

TROY, Mich. — The house on the cul-de-sac at 3035 Newport Court in this Detroit suburb has four bedrooms, a family room, den and central air conditioning. It is priced at $122,000, and if someone buys it within the next five weeks, the General Motors Corp. will toss in a new $9,537 Chevrolet Cavalier to sweeten the deal.

GM, which has had its problems selling cars this year, is also stuck with several hundred unsold homes around the country. The company bought the houses from transferred employees who were unable to sell them on their own.

Since there are more people leaving the Detroit area than coming to it, and because the local economy is depressed by the problems of the automobile industry, houses in the area have been particularly hard to sell. So the big automaker is planning to give away cars as inducements to attract buyers.

The promotion is a test, GM officials said, adding that if it was successful it might be extended to other areas of the country where the company has large numbers of unsold homes. One such area is the suburbs of New York, where the company owns about 70 houses, the result of a recent transfer of several hundred employees from Manhattan to Detroit.

GM officials said that anyone not wanting the car would be given an equivalent discount on the price of the house. Most of the houses have been on the market three months to a year, they said.

NATO Exercise Is Halted by Mud

By David Shribman
New York Times Service

HANAU, West Germany — NATO maneuvers known as "Certain Encounter" were called off Tuesday, a day ahead of schedule, after heavy rain caused tanks to churn mud onto public roads, a U.S. military spokesman said.

The exercise, involving 70,000 soldiers, was begun nine days earlier as one of the annual war games staged by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. It covered about 1,900 square miles (almost 5,000 square kilometers) near the border with East Germany.

The mud left on public highways by armored vehicles was a hazard to driving, the spokesman said. It added that Lt. Gen. Paul Williams, the exercise commander, felt that the primary objectives of the maneuvers had been met. U.S. Army engineers were helping to clean up the roads.

Springboks Play U.S. Match Despite Attempts to Block It

By Doyle McManus
Los Angeles Times Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — South Africa's national rugby team overcame opposition from New York Gov. Hugh L. Carey, a legal appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court and a pre-dawn explosion at a rugby official's office Tuesday — all before its main match of the day against a U.S. amateur all-star squad.

About 2,000 demonstrators marched, chanted and sang in a driving rain outside Albany's Bleeker Municipal Stadium, protesting the presence of the South African team, the Springboks, which they accused of representing South Africa's racial segregation policy.

Many of the protesters wore buttons indicating that they were members of the Communist Workers Party, but there was no sign of a counterdemonstration by the Ku Klux Klan. State officials had said that a confrontation between those groups could touch off a riot.

The chilling deluge did not deter the Springboks, the U.S. Eastern Rugby Union Colonials or an estimated 3,000 rugby fans, who saw the Springboks beat the Colonials, 41-0.

The stadium was ringed with police wearing riot helmets and carrying batons. Suspects around it were blocked off with wooden police barriers. As another security measure, tickets were sold privately, in advance, to members of rugby clubs.

Governor Overruled

Gov. Carey had ordered the match canceled because it would create an "imminent danger of riot." But a U.S. District Court judge ruled Monday that the governor's action was unconstitutional. The ruling was appealed Tuesday to a U.S. Court of Appeals in Manhattan and then to U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall, but both agreed with the lower court that the match should go on.

On Tuesday, a bomb exploded near the offices of the Eastern Rugby Union in Schenectady, N.Y. Detectives said they believe the explosives were placed by someone protesting the Springboks' tour. No one was injured.

Before the game was to begin, police arrested three men and a woman in an apartment used as the local headquarters of the Communist Workers Party. The Albany Police Department reported that a loaded .38-caliber revolver was found, along with some drugs.

In Washington, the House of Representatives refused to go on record against the Springboks' tour. A resolution against the tour won a slim majority, 200-198, but fell far short of the two-thirds vote needed for passage.

Tunisia Places Limits on Use of the Chador

By David Shribman
New York Times Service

TUNIS — The Tunisian government has banned the chador — the robe that covers women from head to foot — from schools and government offices.

A circular distributed by the premier's office and the Ministry of Education said those wearing the chador — which in many Islamic countries has become the symbol of the resurgence of Moslem fundamentalism — would not be admitted to schools and government buildings.

The order apparently is part of a government offensive against Moslem fundamentalists who have been blamed for causing disturbances in Tunisian schools last spring.

NEW YORK — The rear engine of an Eastern Airlines jumbo jet broke into pieces shortly after takeoff from Newark International Airport, federal authorities said. No injuries were reported.

The plane's engine, a Rolls-Royce RB211, broke apart Tuesday as the jet climbed for altitude. The Lockheed L-1011 jet — with 192 passengers and 11 crew members aboard — made an emergency landing at Kennedy International Airport.

Harry Warren Dies in U.S.; Award-Winning Songwriter

From Agency Dispatches
LOS ANGELES — Harry Warren, 87, a Hollywood songwriter and winner of three Academy Awards, died Tuesday of kidney failure.

OBITUARY

Mr. Warren wrote the music for more than 300 songs in more than 50 films. He received Academy Awards for "Lullaby of Broadway" (1935), "You'll Never 1930s, starting with "42nd Street" in 1933. They became the top movie songwriting team of the decade, as they followed with the "Gold Diggers" series, "Footlight Parade," "Wonder Bar," "Twenty Million Sweethearts," "Dames," "Go Into Your Dance" and many others. His song "Don't Give Up the Ship," from "Shipmates Forever," was adopted by the U.S. Naval Academy.

In the 1940s, working mostly with the lyricist Mack Gordon, Mr. Warren was responsible for the songs for many of the hit films of 20th Century-Fox, among them "Down Argentine Way," "That Night in Rio," "Sun Valley Serenade," "Weekend in Havana," "Orchestra Wives," "Springtime in the Rockies" and "Sweet Rosie O'Grady."

Carnival Drummer
Mr. Warren, whose real name was Salvatore Guaragna, was born in 1893 in Brooklyn, the 11th of 12 children of an impoverished Italian shoemaker. At 16, he left high school to be a drummer with a touring carnival. Later he joined the Vitaphone Music Co. in Brooklyn as a self-taught pianist. Before and after World War I service in the Navy, he was a rehearsal pianist. His first published song was "Rose of the Rio Grande," in 1922.

He came to Hollywood in 1932 and served under contract as a composer for Warner Brothers, 20th Century-Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and finally Paramount until 1961. His last song of note was "An Affair to Remember," written for the Cary Grant-Deborah Kerr movie of that name in 1957.

Chief Dan George

Chief Dan George Dies at 82; Acted in 'Little Big Man'

Chief Dan George, 82, a former longshoreman who portrayed a wise old Indian in Hollywood films and once was nominated for an Academy Award, died Wednesday.

Chief George, head of the Tlal-watt section of the Coast Salish tribe of British Columbia, was more than 60 years old when he got his first acting job. He went on to work for the Walt Disney studios and was nominated for an Oscar for his role as Old Lodge Skins in the 1970 movie "Little Big Man" with Dustin Hoffman. He won the New York Film Critics' award as best supporting actor for that role.

"My first break as an actor came in 1961," Chief George once said. "My son was acting in a television series [in Canada] called 'Cariboo County.' There had a white man playing a chief and one day he became sick. The director said he'd have to stop production, and my son said, 'Why don't you get an old Indian for the role? I'll bring you one tomorrow.'"

Chief George once said, "Indians should be cast as Indians in movies and television. A white man just does not know how to be an Indian. A white man cannot understand what it is that goes on in an Indian's mind."

Dutch, Belgians Bar Gypsy Group

THE HAGUE — A band of about 260 Gypsies was stranded near the Dutch border Wednesday, ordered to leave the Netherlands but denied permission to enter Belgium.

The group camped next to the E-10 international highway in Rijsbergen in the southern Netherlands Tuesday night after Belgian border guards turned away the caravan because the Gypsies had no passports. Koko Petalo, "king" of the Dutch Gypsies, was quoted as saying it was "inhumane and irresponsible" to turn away the families. He said many would have to return to their Eastern European homelands if they did not win a reprieve here.

Victor Holms, spokesman for the Dutch Justice Ministry, said the government had ordered the Gypsies to leave the country on Tuesday after their appeal for residence permits was denied last week.

Senate Panel Approves 15 Nominations

Hartman Is Endorsed For Moscow Position

WASHINGTON — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has unanimously approved the nominations of Arthur A. Hartman as ambassador to the Soviet Union and Richard W. Murphy as ambassador to Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Hartman, a career diplomat who is now ambassador to France, Mr. Murphy, a career diplomat who has been ambassador to the Philippines, and 13 other nominees for diplomatic and State Department positions were approved Tuesday in a single 16-0 vote.

The panel also approved by a 13-0 vote a resolution authorizing the participation of U.S. troops in a Sinai multinational force that will monitor the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty. Egyptian and Israeli troops are also participating.

The committee approved the nomination of Faith Ryan Whitlessey, vice chairman of the Delaware County Council in Pennsylvania, as ambassador to Switzerland. She has also served as assistant attorney general of Pennsylvania and as assistant U.S. district attorney for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Hartman has also been the assistant secretary of state for European affairs. Mr. Murphy is a former ambassador to the Philippines and Syria. He is succeeding Robert G. Neumann, who served for only three months this year before resigning, reportedly over policy differences with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.

Other Nominees
The committee approved these other nominations: Michael Newlin, ambassador to Algeria; Robert Paganelli, ambassador to Syria; Joseph Reed, ambassador to Morocco; David Zweifel, ambassador to North Yemen; George Vest, ambassador to the European Economic Community; John Dolibois, ambassador to Luxembourg; Raymond C. Ewing, ambassador to Cyprus; and Jack Matlock Jr., ambassador to Czechoslovakia.

Also approved were the nominations of L. Keith Bulea, as commissioner of the International Joint U.S.-Canadian Commission; Paul Manafort, as a member of the Board of directors of the Overseas Private Investment Corp.; Nyle Brady, as an assistant administrator of the Agency for International Development; and John Bohn, as U.S. director of the Asian Development Bank.

The committee postponed action on the nomination of David B. Funderburk, a conservative professor at North Carolina's Campbell College, as ambassador to Romania. Sen. Paul E. Tsongas, a liberal Democrat from Massachusetts, prevented the committee vote on Mr. Funderburk by placing a legislative "hold" on his nomination.

Sen. Tsongas asked the committee to recall Mr. Funderburk for further questioning about an anti-Communist book he has written. Mr. Tsongas said the nomination "warrants further examination."

Reagan Budget May Worsen Slump in Science Education

By Fred M. Hechinger
New York Times Service
NEW YORK — This may be the age of science everywhere except in American public schools. After a brief burst of activity in response to the first Soviet Sputnik in 1957, elementary and high school science is again in a slump. The backsliding began in the mid-1970s, but current budget-slashing threatens a steep decline.

The National Science Foundation, which in the past has stood in the front lines of the battle for better science teaching and materials, is now fighting a rear-guard battle to retain as much U.S. support for its education programs as possible.

Faced with the Reagan administration's threat to reduce the program's funding to only $9.9 million for fiscal 1982, compared with $64.7 million in the current year, the NSF's hopes are now for a partial rescue by Congress. Last week, a House-Senate conference committee recommended $27.45 million for the science and engineering education program, still a reduction of more than 50 percent. The House last week approved the conference resolution. The Senate is yet to act.

Dramatic gains in science and mathematics education more than 20 years ago — the NSF speaks of "the golden age of science education" — were largely the result of the National Defense Education Act of 1958, the Eisenhower administration's deliberate effort to stress the connection between education subsidies and national security. Remembering this U.S. strategy, many education experts today consider it ironic that education budgets, including those for science and mathematics, are being slashed at the very moment when Washington once again is sounding the alert on Soviet military strength.

Efforts Seen Doomed

Donald W. McCurdy, president of the National Science Teachers Association, warned that efforts to improve the nation's defenses through more advanced technology are doomed "if we do not provide the people who must do these jobs with an essential scientific and technological education."

The NSF supported a study by the National Research Council of "The State of School Science," which shows that only one-third of the nation's school districts offer more than one year of science and mathematics in grades nine through 12.

At least half of all American high school graduates have taken no more science than the minimum requirement of one year of biology and no mathematics beyond algebra. Calculus is studied annually by 5 million Soviet high school students, compared with just over 100,000 Americans. In proportion to its population, Japan graduates five times as many engineers as does the United States.

After a recent tour of Japan's education establishment, Michael W. Kirst, professor of education at Stanford University, concluded that "in the 1980s the Japanese ed-

A notice from union investment

A German investment management company, established in 1956 and backed by 38 shareholder banks in Germany and abroad. Managers of UNIFONDS and 4 other funds with total assets of approximately DM 4.5 Billion. Operating within the strict framework of the German Investment Company Act.

Three good reasons for investing in the German equity market via UNIFONDS now:

First
The overall market level is still low and leading stocks appear cheap, reflecting the weak performance of the German stock market in 1979 and 1980 in comparison with major international markets.

Second
Since the beginning of this decade the Deutschmark has depreciated approx. 40 percent against the US-Dollar, more than discounting adverse developments in the German economy and disregarding a turn to the better in some key areas. By investing now you benefit from the dual opportunity of a low market and an overly depressed currency.

Third
UNIFONDS concentrates by charter on German stocks only. Its solid performance record has been achieved by an investment approach which aims not only at the "big stocks" but also at the growth potential of smaller companies which often is difficult to assess for a foreign investor. A substantial portion of the portfolio is invested in 1981 stock market favorites mentioned below:

The Singing Wars of 'Militia Battlefield'

By Michael Zwerin
International Herald Tribune

PARIS — One night last week Militia Battlefield felt like changing her profession "from singer to sniper." Three drunken boozers insisted on trying to whistle along and a table of Swedish tourists kept clapping out of time until she almost fell off the bridge of "More Than You Know."

Her laugh was robust rather than vulgar. She might be described as generous rather than fat, scrappy rather than aggressive. In any case, she seems to occupy more than her allotted space. She has the kind of confidence it takes to come into a town for the first time with no capital, not knowing a soul, and making a living in a week. She has done it three times. This has been called the School of Hard Knocks, and she graduates with honors.

Busy Schedule

Her schedule of classes is currently as follows: 10:30 p.m. to 2 a.m. six nights a week in the Club Bilibouet, Saint-Germain-des-Prés (through Nov. 28). Tuesdays and Fridays a chauffeur picks her up at 7 and whisks her to the Chevalier du Temple in the Marais for one set, at 3 to the Cobana Rhythm in Pigalle for another, then at 3:45 back to the Chevalier where she finishes at 5 a.m. A total of seven sets on each of those two nights.

"Piece of cake," she says, looking at you as if she knows that you know it's not.

Although she sings the standard jazz repertoire with a large, expressive, controlled voice reminiscent of Cleo Laine or Sarah Vaughan, she never studied music.

"My father was a bass player. He was with the Sons of the Pioneers for awhile. My mother didn't dig music though, she didn't dig anything except working at the telephone company. So we let Mother go and Daddy and me hung out. She made him stop music, which was really a shame because he was good, and he went to work as a rent-a-cop for different companies like Hughes Aircraft around L.A. He and some other cops formed a band. They used to take bunnies like mad, pills they'd confiscated I guess. At 15 I was going along Saturday nights singing a couple of songs with the cop band.

"I was like a poo man's Bob Hope tour; just me, a flamenco dancer and Dalilah." She stopped in London "for a week" on the way back and stayed three years. Her first night she walked into a pub and checked out the Dixieland band. They sounded okay so she asked if she could sit in, then started working with them for 24 a night. Things got better because the homeowners live in houses that float. They are not "houseboats" — a term that the owners feel should be used only if the boat has an engine and can move under its own power — but rather complete houses on barges. To move, barge and house must be towed by a boat or a tug.

There are floating house communities in Sausalito, Calif., in Florida, in Seattle, in Vancouver and in London. So far, only a few of the houses are moored in the New York metropolitan area but two Long Island men have started a company in Patchogue to build houses on barges on a production line scale. The company, called Sundance Floating Homes, turns out a floating house in six to eight weeks once a contract is signed. Nine have been sold, and five more are under construction. Gary Dunne, who runs the company with a partner, Edward Stillwagen, built his first boat at the age of 12. Later, he built boats professionally. Seven years ago, he was looking for a waterfront house for his family, but everything he

"My father said: 'Don't be a musician. It will break your heart.' He sent me to beauty school. I got thrown out for dyeing a stripper's public hair without proper preparation. She ran to the water hose screaming with pain. Boy that was funny. I wasn't really made for beauty school."

"Obviously I got to know a lot of gay guys in beauty school. They seem to like me, and I feel comfortable around them. I started singing professionally in gay clubs in L.A. Then I met Frank Zappa, not in a gay club by the way, and hung out with those crazy Hollywood rock 'n' rollers. I lived in Laurel Canyon. I was 17. You might say I was getting ahead."

Playing a high priestess in a rock musical in Miami, she was discovered by two Canadians who had "just parachuted a whole bunch of cocaine into the Everglades swamps and they had all this money that needed laundering."

Expensive Record

Similar to Mel Brooks' film "The Producers," the Canadians produced an expensive record for her but the basic idea was to lose as much money as possible and the tape was never even sold. She began to suspect that show business was closer to the Lenny Bruce version than Judy Garland's.

The Israeli movie star Dalilah Lavi heard her in a Miami club and invited her to sing for the troops in the Sinai desert during the 1973 war. "It was like a poo man's Bob Hope tour; just me, a flamenco dancer and Dalilah."

Under the Underground

Director Yana Bogova followed her around shooting a documentary film ("Underground" is an understatement) about her life in London, titled simply "Militia Battlefield." It co-starred: "this fabulous faggot Larry, Sir Lawrence Lawson he called himself. Real Tennessee Williams material. He played piano and sang in bars. He had platinum blond hair and when you asked him what he did for a living he answered: 'I put get-well cards in the mail.' The movie played in Paris for awhile, at a theater that's currently showing the Marx brothers." Now the laugh could be called raucous.

After breaking up with her taxi executive, she ran into the Canadian producers again in New York. Not one to avoid the same mistake twice, she went to Montreal on their money and the promise of a job. "The band was terrible so I quit and hit the gay clubs again. Some gossip columnist picked up on me and I did pretty well, stayed two years, did radio, TV and worked steady in clubs, but you can only go so far in Montreal. It's too small, so I picked up and went back to London."

That was 1979, and she soon discovered an obscure law of economics; nightclub performers' pay is unaffected by inflation. So she came to Paris, not knowing a word of French, checked into a cheap hotel and hit the clubs once more. Doesn't that get depressing, starting from scratch over and over? "Yes. Until I open my mouth and start singing."

Gradually the clubs got more visible, the pay better, the hotels less cheap. But she seems to be interested in the process of striving for success more than success itself. She is already talking about her next move.

"I'd like to go to Italy. The Italians like music and they like zoffig women. With a combination like that, I don't see how I can go wrong."

In addition to the Club Bilibouet, Militia Battlefield will appear with Memphis Slim at the Jazz Unit in suburban La Defense Oct. 8-10.

The Floaters: A New Ripple in Homes

NEW YORK — Kitty Ellerman, a product manager for a chemical company, has had five job transfers in the last four years. Next time around, she hopes to take her three-bedroom, two-bathroom house with her.

The day Cecilia Werner, passenger service manager for American Airlines, took possession of her house, a white whale swam up to her back porch. She has photographs to prove it.

In winter, William Lewis, president of Career Blazers Temporary Personnel Service, looks north out his bedroom window to the Hudson River and the George Washington Bridge. In summer, he turns his house around and, sees the same view from the living room.

These possibilities arise only because the homeowners live in houses that float. They are not "houseboats" — a term that the owners feel should be used only if the boat has an engine and can move under its own power — but rather complete houses on barges. To move, barge and house must be towed by a boat or a tug.

The London Stage

The Curious Drama of 'David Anderson'

By Sheridan Morley
International Herald Tribune

LONDON — Those of us who thought we would never live to see Corin Redgrave of the Workers' Revolutionary Party playing a solicitor general in a Conservative government onstage are in for certain surprises at the Lyric Hammersmith Studio. The play, by John Hale, is called explicitly enough "The Case of David Anderson QC" and is not an especially brilliant one; but what it does do, and most valuably, is to provide in drama documentary form the case history of a curious and still controversial figure.

Anderson, who was to be seen in the first-night audience, a dapper and cheery looking fellow in his mid-50s, was solicitor general for Scotland from 1960 until, a few months after the Profumo scandal of 1963, a nervous administration forced his resignation on account of unproved and untested police allegations that he was in the habit of accosting teen-age girls. A decade later, history repeated itself. Anderson had finally managed to get himself back into official Scottish life as the chairman of an Ayrshire planning unit when further allegations of molestation were made against him; this time the police did prosecute. Anderson was convicted and fined, and hasn't worked since.

Hale's play takes the form of a public hearing at which the audience is expected to form some sort of jury; for three hours the evidence is painstakingly laid out and at the close a narrator asks why we think the government, despite steadfast and repeated pleas from some of the most distinguished newspapers and individuals in the land, has consistently refused to reopen the case.

The trouble is that at the end of this play we have no more of an answer than we had at its beginning. The evidence is not so much complex as baroque; it includes a KGB spy plot, the hijacking of a Nazi war criminal in Norway and the supposition of at best gross inefficiency and at worst considerable corruption in the Edinburgh police. We are given but one substantial clue to the case against Anderson, which is that no less than three currently serving ministers when in opposition demanded a retrial, but when in office (and in possession of the relevant files) withdrew that demand.

We, however, have no such luck; the files are not offered in evidence, and we have therefore to take the playwright's word that they are filled with mere hearsay and rumor. But if that is the case, why does the play go suddenly cov, having named more than 50 people in evidence, at naming Anderson's chief prosecutor in Scotland who throughout the drama is a disembodied voice referred to only as Authority? The Anderson case is clearly still a legal minefield, and a play as passionately partisan as this can do no more than prod yet again at officialdom's pathological desire to avoid publicity.

Hale is thus here not so much a dramatist as the producer of a documentary transcript which would have been as, if not more, effective on radio; to have a narrator portentously holding up pieces of paper and saying "these documents are all originals — or photostats," in case presumably we thought they were goldfish, doesn't get us much further but it is good to see Redgrave back in a major performance after far too long at the hustings.

C.P. Taylor's "Good," by the Royal Shakespeare Company at the Warehouse, is a remarkable chamber concert in death and destruction, pitched somewhere close to "Cabaret." The title character is a personification of good in evil; as played by Alan Howard in a marvelous semidetached performance, he is an absent-minded German professor who ends up running Auschwitz for Eichmann, not especially because he wants it but because he genuinely does not see much harm in it.

Part of his problem, if such it be, is that where the hero of "Harvey" only had to contend with an invisible rabbit, the hero of "Good" carries around in his head an entire chamber orchestra, visible to us and audible to him, playing the selected hits of Wagner and Richard Tauber. True, the chronology goes a bit astray (the manager to hear "September Song" five years before anybody wrote it) but Taylor is not a musical historian and what he is concerned with here I think is the possibility of absolute abstract good.

Halder, the Howard character, is not ambitious, or corrupt, or stupid, or afraid; like Don Quixote, and predictably he ends up at Auschwitz reading just that, he wants the world to prove possible and if his contemporaries do at first seem set on burning books well then perhaps that might make life easier for his already over-read students.

Soon of course it's not just the books; an old Jewish friend (Joe Melia in wry splendor) disappears and a black comedy starts to become a black tragedy. In that sense, "Good" has a lot in common with "Arthur UI," and "Schweik"; but where Brecht showed Nazi history as a comic strip, Taylor shows it as a bandstand concert. The stages of national decay merge into a dangerously melodious haze as the band plays on, and Halder comes gradually to the sad realization that Jews are very far down his own personal anxiety scale. Like Simon Gray's "Quartermaine," Taylor's Halder is perpetually otherwise engaged and that engagement is in the end what the play is about. Even his orchestra finally comes to life as it plays him into Auschwitz and there are few more chilling moments in the contemporary theater than that one. Howard Davies' bare-stage production is a masterpiece of deathly economy.

At the Arts, Frank Barrie's "Macready" is an adequate if campy solo gallop through the old actor's life and times, spasmodically energetic but lacking the main thing Macready himself had, which was arrangement.

Floating house: It takes a tow to tango.

Lifestyles

The Floaters: A New Ripple in Homes

and his wife, Lois, liked cost more than $100,000.

An advertisement for a build-it-yourself house gave him the idea of blending his boat-building experience with home construction. He has been building floating houses ever since.

Dunne's own house measures 20 by 44 feet and is moored on the Patchogue River next to his boat-building operation. It has a full-size kitchen with a dishwasher, a 20-by-27-foot dining room, a raised 12-by-20-foot living room, three bedrooms, two bathrooms, a den, a fireplace and a penthouse with another den that opens onto a deck with a whirlpool hot tub.

"The first question most people ask is, 'Will it rock?' Dunne said, explaining that movement of the barges is restricted considerably by iron rings in each corner that can be fastened around piles driven into the water.

Sundance offers three models of floating houses. The smallest measures 14 by 36 feet, has two bedrooms, approximately 1,000 square feet of living space and sells for $50,000. The model the Dunnes live in has 1,700 square feet of space and sells for $65,000. Dunne will also build a 32-by-60-foot split-level house with four living floors, at least three bedrooms, cathedral ceilings, two decks, a sun-room, and a 16-by-16-foot swimming pool. The projected price is $125,000. Down payments range from 33 to 50 percent, with the remainder of the purchase price amortized over 15 years.

The houses are self-contained except for electricity and water for which they need a hook-up on land. They are equipped with their own Coast Guard-approved sewage treatment plant. Salt water is run through the sewage, and electricity breaks down the bacteria, Dunne explained. The homeowners' only chore is to flip a switch.

A hot air heating system uses either bottled propane gas or oil. The insulated windows act as solar panels during the winter and, when combined with extra thick insulation in the walls and ceilings, helps keep heating costs down. Dunne said, noting that his own heating bills came to $450 last year.

The barges on which the houses are built can be purchased separately for $7,000 to $10,000 depending on size, should someone wish to build his own house.

One thousand feet beneath the North Sea is an unlikely place to start looking for better farming techniques. But that's where the husbanding of natural gas starts. Then, from 1,000 acres of tank farms and cracking plants, DSM produces the goods that help Europe's farmers to be some of the most efficient in the world. DSM is one of Europe's leading chemical groups.

It is also Europe's largest producer of fertilizer made from natural gas.

For more than 50 years now DSM has seen its technology grow and spread through more than 400 chemical plants in some 60 countries.

Farming may seem a long way from a hole in the North Sea. But as any farmer will tell you, a hole in the ground is the natural way to start things growing.

BREAKTHROUGH

A Personal Account of the Egypt-Israel Negotiations

By Moshe Dayan. 368 pp. $15.

Alfred A. Knopf, 201 East 52nd St. New York 10022.

Reviewed by Peter Osnos

THE PACE of world events is so fast nowadays and is so extensively covered by daily chroniclers that last year's sensation soon recedes in memory and moment. The Camp David Accords were quite an achievement in 1978-79, before the downfall of the shah, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the hostage crisis, the Iranian war and on and on. Agreements that produced peace between Israel and its biggest Arab neighbor, ending a period of animosity that featured four major wars, appear from this distance, more pallid than they should. Camp David was a triumph. Jimmy Carter was a hero. Menachem Begin and Anwar Sadat were statesmen.

Yet the whole business seems tarnished by failures and disappointments that followed. Carter was soundly trounced at the polls. Talks about autonomy for Palestinians on the West Bank and Gaza stalled. Israelis became suspicious that Sadat would abandon them once he gets back the Sinai next spring. Sadat grew exasperated with Israeli belligerence. Still, Israeli-Egyptian peace survives for now. Relations are, if not amiable, then at least reasonable. In our times and given the tensions that prevailed, such a state of affairs is to be celebrated.

All of this prologue is by way of stirring some enthusiasm for what is a fascinating and important book. "Breakthrough" is Moshe Dayan's account of the peace negotiations in which Dayan as Israel's foreign minister played a supporting part. This is not — as one might expect — a sterile account of a hollow exercise involving personalities of secondary stature. It is, in sum, an absorbing recreation of an extraordinarily complex and emotional relationship among three leaders juggling political requirements with risk-taking and succeeding in their objectives.

The Principals' Show

Dayan is probably the best suited of any of the participants to write a full account of the negotiations. He has less at stake than Carter, Begin or Sadat. After all, Dayan will be more remembered for his military prowess than his diplomatic spear-carrying. He takes no undue credit for his own role, making clear throughout that Camp David was almost completely the principals' show. I suppose an especially skillful and fortunate journalist or historian could get access to the negotiators' recollections. But Dayan was there, and he provides a firsthand account that no outsider could really match.

Several themes emerge. Perhaps the most surprising is the toughness of Jimmy Carter. Somewhere Carter got a reputation as a wimp, unable to make hard choices and unable, therefore, to lead. But that is not the picture that comes through here. "Though Carter spoke in a dull monotone," Dayan writes at one difficult point in the talks, "there was fury in his cold blue eyes and his glance was dagger sharp. His portrayal of our position was basically correct, but it could not have been expressed in a more hostile form."

Carter's grasp of the detail was evidently impressive enough to move Sadat and Begin at times when they seemed least amenable. In Dayan's account, Carter personally held the process together — quite a tribute.

Coolness

The performance of other Americans is portrayed as less formidable, and for that Carter to some extent must be blamed. The "coolness" between Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski comes through as a

THE opening bid of one heart, on the diagramed deal, promised at least a five-card suit, so North raised to game directly over the weak two-spade intervention, hiding his strong diamond suit.

West, naturally bid four spades, expecting a cheap save against a vulnerable game. This would have cost 300 points, a reasonable price to pay, but South carried on to five hearts. This was a doubtful decision, since his spade honors were more likely to be of value in attack than in defense.

West, doubled to prevent any further action from his partner, and led his singleton diamond. There was now a way to make the doubled contract, but South did not manage it.

He won the first trick with the diamond king, entered his hand with a spade lead to the ace and played a low trump. As West's double had suggested a good trump holding, he inserted the jack, abandoning hope of making two trump tricks. He could not afford to have South play the seven from the dummy.

South won with the ace and was in trouble. He played the diamond ace, and could not avoid a one-trick defeat when West ruffed and shifted to a club.

South would have brought home his contract if he had arranged to lead the second round of diamonds from his own hand. After entering his hand with a spade at the second trick, he should have led the diamond ten.

Dig in Macedonia Uncovers 2 Tombs

ATHENS — A Greek archaeologist claims to have discovered two Macedonian tombs dating back 23 centuries not far from one believed to be that of King Philip, father of Alexander the Great.

At Vergina, in northern Greece, he discovered the tomb thought to be Philip's four years ago. He has continued excavations in the area in the belief that it will prove to be the site of the ancient city of Aigai, capital of the Macedonian kings.

Andronicos estimated that the tombs date from the beginning of the third century B.C. Eight Macedonian tombs have already been discovered in the area of Vergina, the most famous of which was the one Andronicos believes to be that of Philip.

Milwaukee Moves Up by Beating Boston, 10-8

BOSTON — Ted Simmons drove in four runs with a homer, a double and a single as Milwaukee rallied behind veteran reliever Rollie Fingers Tuesday for a 10-8 victory over the Red Sox that hoisted the Brewers into a tie for second place in the American League East.

Simmons' 14th homer, with two out in the seventh, put Milwaukee in front, 8-7. Boston tied the score in the bottom of the inning, then Robin Yount doubled home the tie breaker in the ninth and Simmons doubled in another run. Fingers, who has 26 saves, checked the Red Sox on three hits in the last 2 1/2 innings.

When Leaping Linesmen Appear Ridiculous

By George Vecsey
NEW YORK — Eleven months is too long to wait for another United States Open. If there were a button to press, I would start another festival today at Flushing Meadows.

Harry Hopman, the Australian who was the most successful captain in Davis Cup history, disagrees: "I haven't heard a player yet who doesn't think this is ridiculous. In the old days, some of the people calling the lines seemed to have been recruited from an overstaffed sofa in a darkened parlor of the club.

In San Diego, Tom Seaver won his 13th game as Cincinnati edged San Diego, 3-2. Seaver, who has won his last six decisions, left in the eighth after Gene Richards tripled to drive in Ozzie Smith with the Padres' second run.

In San Francisco, Larry Herndon drove in three runs with an inside-the-park homer and a single to help beat Los Angeles and Fernando Valenzuela, 5-2. Valenzuela gave up seven hits and four runs in six innings in his first loss of the second season.

Juan Antonio Samaranch and Sebastian Coe talk before the start of the Olympic Congress.

Olympic Congress Opens With Plea for Independence

BADEN-BADEN, West Germany — The president of the International Olympic Committee, Juan Antonio Samaranch, said Wednesday that political domination of sports organizations could doom the Olympic movement. In a speech opening the Olympic Congress, Samaranch appealed to governments to respect the independence of their national sporting bodies.

Samaranch, who was advised Wednesday that Olympic athletes had chosen British runner Sebastian Coe as their spokesman at the congress, pledged that the views of the athletes would be respected in regard to new codes of Olympic eligibility and in the fight to stamp out doping and violence in sport.

England, with only one match to play, can contest for nine points, a target that Hungary and Romania should surpass, said England's manager, Ron Greenwood, who traveled to Bucharest: "It was the last result we wanted. The outlook is now bleak for England."

Tie in Bucharest Dims England's World Cup Hopes

BUCHAREST — A grim defensive display earned Hungary a goalless soccer draw in its World Cup qualifying match against Romania here Wednesday night. The result, however, was far more important than the performance, and both East European nations had plenty to smile about at the final whistle. The one vital point that each gained should be enough to send both to Spain for next year's final stages — at the expense of England.

WASHINGTON — "The class will please come to order. Today, children, we will talk about American agriculture. The United States produces more meat, grain, corn, dairy products, vegetables and fruit than any country on earth. Thanks to our farmers, food is one of our largest exports and we are able to feed people all over the world."

growing bodies because they contain calcium which your bones need to make you strong. How many glasses of milk should a young person drink a day? "A half a cup."

"No, Johnny. A half a cup is certainly not enough milk for someone your age." "Lady in the cafeteria said that's all I could have."

"What's the federal regulations?" "Those are the rules the president and his advisers decide the people must live by. He had to cut down on your milk allowance to save money for the country."

"What does he do with all the milk we ain't allowed to drink?" "It's made into butter and cheese and stored in warehouses all over America, until it gets rotten and then they throw it away."

"No, Johnny. That's the only way we can encourage farmers to produce milk. By buying up their surplus they're guaranteed a profit on their milk. Shall we move on to vegetables? What kind of vegetables do our American farmers raise?"

"I know the answer to that one, Catnip." "Catnip is not a vegetable, Johnny."

"Lady in the cafeteria said it was a vegetable. She said it was entitled to two vegetables; potatoes and catsup."

"Well, it's true that the Department of Agriculture declares the other day that catsup was a vegetable, but farmers don't raise it. They raise tomatoes and afterwards they are squashed up and put into bottles as catsup. Then people like yourselves put the catsup on your hamburgers to make them taste better."

"Well, then, you can put catsup on your tofu." "I did, but it still tasted lousy."

"Johnny, you have disrupted this class enough today. You will stay after school and write 100 times on the blackboard, 'The United States produces more food than any country in the world today.'"

"You're lucky. It really tastes lousy."

"Now let's talk about other things farmers raise. Edna, name something a farmer produces."

Art Carney

'Film Might Look Simple . . . but It Really Helps To Be an Actor,' Says the Former 'Honeymooner'

By Jeffrey Robinson International Herald Tribune

NICE — It was between scenes on the yacht. Art Carney was standing with David Niven, his co-star, waiting for the crew to set up the next shot when Niven asked, "Have you made a lot of sea pictures?" Carney replied flatly, "All my pictures are C pictures!"

It drew a laugh, but it is far from the truth. This fall to film a light comedy with Niven and Maggie Smith called "Ménage à Trois" (the U.S. title is "Three's a Crowd"), the 63-year-old Carney won the 1974 Academy Award for best actor for his starring role in "Harry and Tony Hunt in Norton and Crandem" which is, however, best known to U.S. TV audiences as Ed Norton, the likable sewer worker who lived upstairs from Jackie Gleason's Ralph Crandem on the series "The Honeymooners."

"The Honeymooners" is still popping up as reruns around America. I guess it's touched three or four generations by now. It was an absurd comedy, very broad, almost cartoonish characters. But you believe in Norton and Crandem because even when they were scheming, they were likable. I say it modestly, but those were classic comedy shows. Even today I'd like to have a quarter for every time someone comes up to me and says, 'Hey Ed, how's everything down in the sewer?'"

Stand-Up Start His career in show business began 44 years ago. "I did a stale stand-up comedy act of impromptu one-liners. I was called Wendell Wilkie. Al Smith. It's even staler today because everybody I could imitate is dead."

And his first motion picture role was 41 years ago in a Jimmy Stewart-Faulett Goddard film called "Pot o' Gold." "I only had a few lines. My performance was in no way memorable."

In between "Pot o' Gold" and "Harry and Tony," he not only made Ed Norton a household name in the United States, he also performed dramatic roles on both television and the stage. "I've always thought of myself as an actor who could play comedy instead of a comedian. I started with Walter Matthau in 'The Odd Couple' on Broadway and for me that required an actor, not a comedian throwing off lines. I first appeared on Broadway in 1957 in a play called 'The Kope Dancers.' That's a very heavy drama. Then I did plays like 'Take Her She's Mine' and 'Prisoner of Second Avenue,' and those are both light and funny. Going from stage to television to film might be three different disciplines, but it helps if you're an actor. If you're just a comedian you probably won't make it."

The stage he sees as a very rigid discipline. He says you work hard for a couple of months getting the play right and once you have it, you have to stay tight there. Nothing can change. Television is something of a combination of the stage and film. You might work in front of a live audience, but if you blow a scene you always have the chance to do it again. Film is a medium he sees as requiring the discipline of concentration.

"Film might look simple because you can do your lines a hundred times, but it really helps to be an actor. After all, films are almost never shot in sequence so you have to understand the character you're playing and have the ability to concentrate. In the morning you might shoot a scene where the character is tense and storms out of a room and in the afternoon you shoot a scene where he's calmly sitting in the garden long before he ever goes into the room. You've got to understand what's happened before each scene so you can make the emotion match with the scene that goes before it, even though you haven't yet shot that one. Make that read CONCENTRATION in capital letters."

Carney is here with his wife, Jean. "There's not a lot for her to do here while I'm working, except shop. And she's doing that very well." The two of them have "sort of" been married for 41 years. They were childhood sweethearts when they tied the knot in 1940, and that marriage lasted 26 years. They have three children and four grandchildren. They split up in 1966 and each of them remarried. Jean's second marriage lasted 4 1/2 years. Carney's 10. They remarried in 1979 and he says he couldn't be happier about it.

"I'm very thankful that we're back together again. I consider myself very fortunate. And believe me, it's like nothing happened in between. It's like we've always been together." They live in Connecticut because, he said, "I never wanted to live in New York and have never been part of the Hollywood scene." When he is not working on a picture he says he's very good at simply hanging around the house.

"I spend most of my time with my family. I'm not much of a traveler so I guess we stick pretty close to home. I'm quite good at taking out the garbage. I walk to the mailbox which is 200 yards. I don't really have any hobbies. I guess you could say my vocation and avocation is wrapped up in one. I don't go to the movies as much as I probably should. And when I see one of those old 'Honeymooners' reruns I look at them and think to myself, my God, how thin I was 25 years ago."

There has been another change since "The Honeymooners." These days he wears a very small hearing aid, even when he films. "I suffer from a nerve deafness. All of my brothers had it because it's something that runs in my father's family. I work with it because if I didn't I wouldn't be able to pick up my lines and cues and it would be too awkward to work without it." He says directors usually don't mind, and anyway it's small enough to almost be invisible. On the other hand, it occasionally makes for some interesting conversation.

"Sometimes it makes me think people have said things to me that they didn't really say. Like the night someone rang after I got off the stage in a play and they asked 'Are you still knocking them dead?' Thanks to my hearing aid I could have sworn they were asking, 'Are you still nosing in bed?'"

PEOPLE: For Raoul Wallenberg

The U.S. Congress has voted to give honorary U.S. citizenship to Raoul Wallenberg, the Swedish diplomat who is credited with saving the lives of thousands of Hungarian Jews during World War II.

Rep. Jack F. Kemp, a New York Republican, said President Reagan will sign the resolution. Wallenberg was assigned to the Swedish Embassy in Budapest in 1944 and helped Jews escape at a time when thousands were being taken to Nazi extermination camps. Wallenberg was seized by Soviet authorities in early 1945 after the Red Army drove German forces out of Budapest. The Kremlin has said that Wallenberg died in a Soviet jail, but there have been reports that he may still be alive in a Soviet prison camp.

Wealthy friends of U.S. Vice President George Bush have raised $124,700 in tax-deductible donations to redecorate his official residence just six years after Nelson Rockefeller refurbished it. Press secretary Peter Teesley said that 18 individuals or couples, all friends of the Bushes, have contributed to a fund controlled by Midland, Texas, oil producer Earle Craig Jr. and his wife, Dorothy. Several hours after reports about the redecoration fund surfaced, Bush's wife, Barbara, announced that no more money would be solicited. "Mrs. Bush funds $125,000 a sufficient amount to refurbish the rooms," Teesley said earlier this year. Private donors, including many in the oil industry, contributed more than $800,000 to help redecorate the White House. Last week it was disclosed that first lady Nancy Reagan was spending more than $200,000 of that for chinaware.

David Brinkley will be the host and anchor of ABC's expanded Sunday morning interview and news program called "This Week," under a four-year contract with ABC News. ABC News President Roone Arledge said the new 60-minute Sunday show, which will replace the 30-minute "Issues and Answers," will probably debut Nov. 15. Brinkley, who retired Friday after 38 years with NBC

News, will also play a key role in ABC's political and election coverage from Washington, as well as special projects, the first being a documentary on President Franklin D. Roosevelt in January, marking the 100th anniversary of Roosevelt's birth.

Desmond Tutu, 49, the black Anglican bishop of South Africa, is among more than 60 candidates for the 1981 Nobel Peace Prize, the Nobel Institute said. Tutu, secretary of the South African Council of Churches, is a vociferous critic of apartheid who angered his government during a U.S. tour this year by calling for a halt to overseas investment in South Africa. His passport subsequently was withdrawn. Tutu's nomination was not disclosed when nominations closed on Feb. 1, but Institute Director Jacob Svendrup has confirmed the nomination.

Dancer Ann Miller left a diamond ring she said was worth $1.5 million in an airplane lavatory after she took it off to wash her hands, a publicity agent said in Los Angeles. Miller was on a flight from New York to Los Angeles when she lost the 30-carat ring, said Rachel McAlister of the Rogers and Cowan agency. Miller was on leave from "Sugar Babies" when she was to film a "Love Boat" musical special for television in Hollywood.

"I remember his crying bitterly only two times," said Maxima Shostakovich of his father, the great Russian composer. "First, when he came home after having been forced to join the Communist Party." Maxim Shostakovich is in Washington to conduct the National Symphony Orchestra this week in four concerts of his father's music, marking the anniversary of the composer's birth. "Now, in honor of his 75th anniversary, the Soviet Union is issuing a new set of his complete works," Maxim Shostakovich noted at a press conference in the Kennedy Center. "But even here the narrow-minded functionality of the government are interfering. For instance, all of the dedications to family and friends have been deleted; those to Mstislav Rostropovich, to my mother, to violinist David Oistrakh, to me and to others. I am wondering, will they delete the dedication of the Twelfth Symphony to Lenin?"
